First Session of the Old Time Telegran

in This City. A GATHERING OF NOTABLE MEN WHO HAVE HAT STRANGE EXPERIENCES—PRESIDENT MAYNARD'S ADDRESS, GIVING A BRIEF SKETCH OF THE MEMBERS PLECTED.

The first session of the old-time telegraphers was held at the Ebbitt House this morning. About a hundred members were present when the meeting was called to order by Mr. George C. Maynard, the president of the association. Mr. W. J. Dealy, the secretary and treasurer, was kept busy during the first half hour before the meeting in shaking hands with old association association. He thought the membership of the association and that relies have their portraits preserved for the association and that relies should be collected. He recommedded that the result had been satisfacted by any term in the report of four deaths from typhoid fever and four from intermittent and congestive fevers, while a comparatively large number of fatal cases from diseases of the disease have their portraits preserved for the nassociation should be collected for the National Museum. He thought the membership of the association should be very greatly enlarged. Whet had

We are assembled today to greet old friends and to find new ones; to revive memories and recount experiences of days gone by and to strengthen the bonds of fraternal sympathy and good will. We are to hear tidings from the absent and we shall send them our warmnest greetings. We hall with pride and satisfaction the men who have worked their way from the men who have well as the men who way from the men who way the men who way the men who way the men tion the men who have worked their way from some humble place in our ranks to positions of distinction and honor; Carnegie, Bullock, Green, Edison, Davis, Wickham, Reid; George Kennan, that man who was disciplined in the telegraph to become one of the world's heroes; and scores of others no less distinguished. But we shall not forget that host of others unknown to fame, who have long been standing at their posts of duty, oftentimes in loneliness, discomfort and deprivation, whose yearly records of duties done have always been closed with the word "faithful," and, at our hands, no man shall receive higher honer than Another class of our associates should have our high consideration. No man can say that Morse's appeal to Congress for aid in conducting his experiments would have been successful had not Anna Ellsworth induced her father to five it his powerful support. Morse recognized her valuable assistance and gave her the place of honor when his line was inaugurated. From the very first women began to learn the business, and were employed on the lines of nearly every company that was established. The fascination of the work, the habit of secrecy which isolates him from all the rest of the world, holds him in close fellowship with his brethren and creates a lasting spirit of comaraderic which no con-ventionalities or difference in position can destroy. The swifest sender who ever tenched ventionalities or difference in position can destroy. The swifest sender who ever touched a key would never pass Andy Carnegie without recognition, because he was once a messenger; there is not a lineman in the land who would refuse to shake hands with Senator Cush Davis, because he used to climb poles without spurs, and the old-timer who holds the chief office in the greatest railway corporation will never reach a position so exalted that the boys will feel the slightest embarrassment in asking him for a pass over his road. And our amiable and efficient legal brother, Mr. Safford, with the interstate commerce commission and all the power of the brother, Mr. Safford, with the interstate commerce commission and all the power of the government behind him, cannot keep the boys from getting their passes. And they get them because the man of exalted position never forgets his more humble comrade and is always glad to meet him and to lend him a hand.

The functions of our association are not only to enlarge acquaintances and foster a spirit of good will among its members, but it is to preserve the history of the telegraph and of the men who have taken part in its marvelous development.

GROWTH OF THE CIRCUITS. Not fifty years ago one little line led its solitary way out of this city and halted forty miles away. Today hundreds of lines go in miles away. Today hundreds of lines go in every direction. They encircle the world and encompass humanity. The world knows this as a great achievement of science full of mystery. We know it as the result of the honest, faithful labors of our associates, living and dead, whose memories we are to cherish and whose deeds we are to put on record. No body of men can have a higher purpose than this.

The watchword of the world is progress. In the march of civilization the telegraph must

The watchword of the world is progress. In the march of civilization the telegraph must continue to lead the procession, not merely in maintaining a high state of science and art to meet the constantly increasing demands for better facilities for carrying on the great enterprise, but in the intelligence, integrity and high character of the men and women who are engaged in it.

One of the strongest reasons for this requirement is the fact that the telegraph is one of the

One of the strongest reasons for this requirement is the fact that the telegraph is one of the best schools for educating men for practical business, and its teaching and its influence should always be on the side of right.

When the hand of one Anna Ellsworth touched that magic wire stretching across the great distance which separated the country's capital from the neighboring city, joining them in a unicn never more to be broken, it sounded a note in true harmony with the one keynote of the universe to which some chord in every human heart, if rightly tuned, will vibrate. It is the keynote of the universal song of "Peace and good will to all men." That note still rings on and all the world hears it. We are here today to set ourselves in tune and prepare to join the song. With this preparation we shall be ready for the business before

Today there are thousands of them holding important positions, doing efficient service, clamoring for no "rights," exerting an influence for good that cannot be expressed in words, an honor to themselves and the fraternity. Our association would be stronger and better if they were numbered among our membership.

While we remember the living we may not forget our dead. Since our last meeting David Brooks, Col. L. M. Dayton, Thomas Finnegan and other valued members of our association have gone away. But, accustomed as we are to penetrate the mystery of distance and to recognize the strong personality of loved ones whom we cannot see, our faith will not stop at this greater mystery, and so whether our comrades sit with us today, whether they stand at their various distant posts of duty, or whether they have gone beyond the reach of our call, we count them all as our friends and hold them as our own.
